The New York boxer looked like a defeated man in the early rounds of the combat. Kid Kaplan of Meriden, Conn., received the award of the judges over Kid Sullivan of Brooklyn in a slow twelve round bout. For some unknown reason the Kaplan-Sullivan contest was given the place of honor on the program. The contestants turned out to be a pair of rough and ready pre-liminary boxers who hugged, clinched and wrestled all over the ring from the first round to the last. Kaplan was the stronger of the two, and as Sullivan tired badly in the closing rounds the verdict went to the Connecticut man.

man's eye and it was a one-sided battle.

Lew Paluse, a Sait Lake City featherweight, gave an interesting boxing lesson to Trying Jampol, a former amateur boxer. The Utah boy is a very clever boxer and kept a straight left hand in Jampol's face from start to finish. Jampol landed but one effective blow throughout the jout, a right hander to the chin, that shook up the little fellow for a few seconds.

Joe Prisco. New York featherweight, used Tibby Watson, formerly of Austraila, as a punching bag in a six round contest that was decidedly onesided.
Frisco, who is a very convincing hitter, punched Watson all over the ring for the entire bout. In the last round Frisco had Watson wabbly and close to a knockout. Despite the fact that Watson hit Frisco low in the fourth round and again in the sixth Watson's sole qualification is his ability to take punishment.
